ought to be in the war where there was real fighting. I told the manager I was going to get off a joke at Heenau's expense, and he forbade me, as he said Heenau was a good patron of the place, and people often came to see him in the audience. I couldn't help doing it, however, and I was able to do so without changing a word in my part. When I came to the line which read: 'All ablebodied men ought to fight for their country,' I rendered it this way: 'All able bodied men ought to fight'—then turning to Heenan's box, and walking over toward it, I contin-ued in a louder tone—'for their country.'

"The effect was instantaneous on the au-dience, and a great shout went up and general handicapping. Heenan put his hands to his face and burst out laughing, and when the audience ceased to applaud he clapped his hands approvingly and this started another outburst, and even the manager, who threatened to discharge me if I guyed Hee nan, I saw laughing behind the scenes. It was a play called "The Seven Sisters," a backery of the seven series of the series o burlesque.

"Next day a lady in the company, whose husband knew Heenan, told me that Heenan desired an introduction. I declined, as I had a horror of fighters, but the request was renewed, and I sent back that when he gave up gaming and prize fighting I would be glad to meet him. I supposed nothing would come of this, but next day I received a marked copy of Wilkes's Spirit of the Times, in which the announcement was made that Heenau had withdrawn his challenge to the world and had also sold out his interest in a gambling saloon in New York.

"I was quite astonished, and being yet a girl, was also pleased, for it flattered my wanity that while the whole country was wondering why Heenan had withdrawn his challenge to the world I slone knew the resl cause. He was presented to me that afternoon, and I was surprised to meet a man to him a week or two I fell hopelessly in love and secretly married him, for my parents opposed the match. An odd selection this giant made for a wie-I only weighed 110 pounds at the time. It seemed queer that he should have ever admired me."

There was a look in the woman's eyes, however, that did not make the matter seem so strange after all .- San Francisco Ex-

The Crow and the Drake.

exandria (9)

A duck with a brood of ducklings was walking along the edge of Hankins's pond, near Pleasant Mount, Pennsylvania, a few days ago, when one of a flock of crows that were hanging about the spot lit on the ground near the ducks, and pecked ...36.00 and strutted to and fro, in her indifferent sort of way, as though not noticing the presence of the ducks, but all the time drawing closer and closer to them. Finally the crow made a sudden movement, capturel a duck-ling and flew away with it, greeted by a loud chorus of congratulatory caws from its com-panions, who had been perched in a tree not far away as quiet as mice There was great commotion in the dack family over the loss of one of its members, and the old duck's drake, which had been swimming in the pond near by, hurried to her and quacked his condolence.

After a few minutes another crow, probably envious of the success of its fellow in se curing so delicious a meal so neatly, drop-Exchange. Advertisements, orders for the paper, news, or any information or business can be sent by telephone.
